Dana Siegel's Official Party Report

Thursday night had a veritable smorgasbord of parties, with something for absolutely everyone, whether or not they imbibed alcohol or not, whether or not they were hungry or not. Everyone could find the perfect party to attend, and since all the parties are on the fifth floor, finding the party was extremely easy!

Of course, with all the myriad of parties available, what are the chances that two separate parties would use gnomes as a theme? One would think it highly unlikely; however, both the Westercon 60, "Gnomeward Bound" and the Denver in 2008, "Gnomes on the Range" coincidentally had gnomes as a theme.

There were many great parties to be found, Xerps in 2010 is always fun, the Nippon in 2007 had wonderful drinks and refreshments (which tasted better if you couldn't read the Japanese on the wrappers), and the League of Evil Geniuses party was very creative (especially the light-up fireflies). However, the award of party of the night has to be given to the Denver in 2008, Gnomes on the Range! The decorations were great, food and drink was plentiful, and who could pass up the 12 inch ceramic gnomes (of course, I had to, but that was because it would be too hard to take one on the plane, and I got a smaller stuffed gnome that was almost as cute).

For Wednesday night, the party of the night award has to go to the Hollister in 2008 bid, with the Buffy party a close second.

Elevator Etiquette: A full elevator can always hold three more people.

Escalator party hosts please report to the 10th floor of the Hilton at 8 PM tonight.
